Raptors: Heralds of a Changing World with Speaker: Caroline Goldman

Raptors are beautiful creatures, regarded by many as symbols of strength, fidelity, and freedom. But they are also important scientifically, informing a branch of conservation science. Find out about what one science organization is learning from raptors. Caroline Goldman, the Executive Director of HawkWatch International, will speak at this program, the first of our new season! Caroline joined HWI after spending several years in Central America working for the Nature Conservancy's Belize Country Program. She received her Masters of Public Administration with a focus on Nonprofit Management and Environmental Policy, as well as a Masters of International Relations, both in 2001, from the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University in New York. In 1994, she graduated from Brown University with a B.A. in American Civilization & Race Relations.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

By Jen Hajj
GSLA President

HAPPY AUTUMN, EVERYONE!

It's a lovely time of year, and there is so much that you can do with Audubon. I hope you'll take a look at the calendar of events and find some field trips or other activities that will inspire you.

Do you like feeding the birds? Then consider purchasing some black-oil sunflower seeds from GSLA. Our annual sunflower seed sale supports local growers and conservation efforts. It will also benefit your backyard birds, by giving them a sweet treat to eat.

Or maybe you are a bit of a party animal. The annual gala is coming up on September 25. It will be at the Gathering Place at Gardner Village, and is sure to be just as much fun as it has been in the past. We know from experience that it is a lovely venue, with good food and lots of elbow room. I had a sneak peek at some of the auction items, and they are pretty nice this year. There is a little something for everyone, from tickets to sporting events, to autographed field guides, to gear for your next camping trip. It all supports Great Salt Lake Audubon. Make sure you register today.

Or maybe you are the outdoor type. Our field trips are consistently spectacular, with knowledgeable guides and beautiful places. And of course, there are the birds! Migration is gearing up, so you are bound to see many types of birds as they journey south to their winter homes.

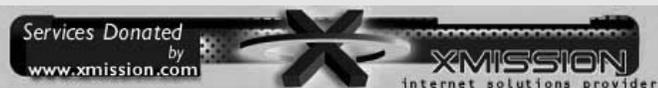

Maybe you like to learn new things. The invited speakers at our general meetings are very informative. Plan to join us on the third Tuesday of each month, at the Sugarhouse Garden Center.

Maybe you have ideas that we haven't yet thought of. Consider joining the board, and making a difference for GSLA and its members. I hope you'll digest all that we have for you in this edition of the Pelican, and that you are inspired to try something new with GSLA.

Your Feathered Friend,
Jen

GSLA EMAIL ACTION ALERT

Great Salt Lake Audubon is in the process of setting up an email action alert service. This system will be used to alert interested GSLA members to local environmental and conservation issues and actions such as proposed resource extraction in bird-sensitive areas, comment periods, hearings, etc. If you are interested to receive these alerts, please send your name and email address to gsla@greatsaltlakeaudubon.org. Put ACTION ALERT in the subject line.

BOARD MEETING HIGHLIGHTS FOR JULY AND AUGUST 2008

By Arne Hultquist, Secretary

On the conservation front the Board approved a position letter on the proposed Great Salt Lake selenium standard proposed by the State of Utah DWQ. GSLA's position is the proposed standard is not conservative enough. GSLA will be submitting that letter to DWQ during the current comment period. We would encourage all GSLA members or anyone concerned with conservation to visit our website read our letter and the other information associated with this issue. The Board would also encourage all GSLA members to comment on your own behalf during the comment period.

The Board has changed the responsibilities for the Treasurer's position to reflect the recommendation of the auditor and the outgoing Treasurer Kathy Waddell. The Board appreciated Kathy's presence and efforts during the last two years and will miss her. The Board welcomed and approved appointing David Shen to the Board as the new Treasurer. Another change to our financial portfolio was to diversify our accounts such that not all of our assets were with one bank. This change will protect us in case of bank failure and our assets will be covered by FDIC insurance.

The Board is energized by our new Executive Director. He is very active and provided the Board with a long list of items he has been pursuing the last two months. He will be organizing the dedication of our Jordan River project for next spring. GSLA members should consider attending the dedication and stay tuned for more details.

The Board also approved upgrading our internet services at the office and for our members. In the near future our office will have information technology appropriate for this century. The upgrade should allow the Executive Director and others working in the office the opportunity to perform tasks in a timely manner with appropriate tools.

Finally the Board is looking forward to a spectacular Gala. Great silent auction items have been received and more are forthcoming. The gala committee has a great speaker and some great music lined up. Please be sure to respond positively to your Gala invitation that accompanies this issue of your Pelican.

FYI - You can get rid of unwanted catalogs while still receiving those you would like. Please alert anyone you know who feels inundated with unwanted catalogs.

BRUCE'S BLOG : AWARENESS AND CONSCIOUSNESS

One of the opportunities that comes with the privilege of occupying the GSLA Executive Director position is the chance to express some of my insights and thoughts in writing every couple of months.

Lately I've been participating in some GSLA events (Basin & Range, Brighton Bird Count), assisting June at our information booth at the July 24th expo at Tracy Aviary, and visiting some of the existing and potential preservation sites in our area (our Jordan River wildlife habitat restoration project, Nature Conservancy's Layton Marsh, the Farmington Bay Nature Center, various areas along the rest of the Jordan River). I'm heartened by how much progress has been made just in the past decade. It is striking to me how much influence we have, and can have, as individuals and as an organization.

Perhaps the greatest influence we can have is in simply making other people aware; of making humans conscious of these birds, these sentient beings with whom we share the available living space here in our GSLA area. We do it of course by the examples we set, by the kind of lives we lead and the choices we make, which are observed by those with whom we come in contact.

But, even more proactively, we do it by our participation in birding and conservation activities. With us in Jean and Ray's Brighton Count group, for example, were people who had never been birding before. Our enthusiasm rubbed off and they were excited, thrilled, at being able to identify some of the birds we saw. You remember that feeling! From now on they will forever be conscious of the birds and wildlife they come in contact with.

At Frank Howe's B&R Bird Ecology field trip, when the mother Meadowlark flew off her nest virtually right at our feet, we felt in our gut her crucial need for the basic necessities for survival of shelter, food and water, and undisturbed space to live in. Recently I gave a presentation on birds and birding and led a field trip up at Solitude. I tried to help these outdoor recreationists and summer condo dwellers be aware that the birds there are conscious living individuals sharing that living space, not just colorful entertainment or a set of identifying field marks; and that they depend on the good graces of humans like them for survival.

Everything you do with Great Salt Lake Audubon helps make other people aware and conscious of birds, and of the essential need to conserve the remaining critical wildlife habitat spaces in our area.

-Bruce.

MIGRATING RAPTOR ID CLASS
by Jen Hajj at Sugarhouse Garden Center

Saturday, September 20th, 7:30am
SALT LAKE INTERNATIONAL CENTER

Leader: Tim Avery

Join GSL Audubon for a morning birding the Salt Lake International Center Migrant Trap. In less than a year, nearly 150 species have been tallied at this location that looks unlike any other migrant trap in the west. Large warehouses and vacant lots, lined with cottonwoods, Russian olives, poplars, and other decorative trees. Hedgerows, lines of willows, and numerous patches of thick understory, as well as several ponds, canals, and weedy patches, help to create an oasis on the south end of the Great Salt Lake that attracts southbound migrants by the flock in the fall. We should be treated to warblers, vireos, sparrows, and a handful of other passerine migrants. Tanagers, orioles, grosbeaks, buntings, woodpeckers, and hawks are also often found meandering through the trees. We will cover many of the most productive areas and give those unfamiliar with the area a crash course in birding this extensive and somewhat incredible urban jungle! Plan on meeting in the SE corner of the Shopko Parking Lot in Sugarhouse at 7:30am and birding the IC for most of the morning. Food and water are available on site at several restaurants and a gas station. If time permits and participants are willing we may visit several other south shore locations for shorebirds, waterfowl and other fall migrants. We will plan on being back to Sugarhouse no later than 3:00pm. Call Tim (440-3035) if you have any questions.

Saturday, September 20th, 8am

ALAN WEISMAN AT STEGNER CENTER

Alan Weisman will be in Salt Lake City on September 30 as part of the Wallace Stegner Center's Lecture Series. Weisman is the author of The New York Times bestseller The World Without Us. In one of the most audacious thought experiments of our time, Alan Weisman imagines what might happen to the Earth if humans vanished and shows us humanity's true impact on the environment in a wholly original way, and challenges each of us to re-imagine our planet—and our place within it.

“How would the rest of nature respond if it were suddenly relieved of the relentless pressures we heap on it?” Alan Weisman asks. “How soon would, or could, the climate return to where it was before we fired up all our engines? Could nature ever obliterate all our traces?” These questions are explored and brilliantly answered in The World Without Us, Weisman's provocative exploration of how humans can lead fully engaging lives without destroying the natural world in the process.

Hear Alan Weisman Tuesday, September 30, 2008, at 7:00pm.
